
Subject: "It's getting harder to stay excited about trying!"

Hey, Dr. Jill here...

Sometimes I get e-mails like this one:

"Jill, I'm sick to the back teeth of people that say I've ONLY been trying a few months. And to just keep going as if it's not a big deal!

I know it hasn't been as long as what some people are. But it's still hard seeing that negative staring back at me every single time.

And (sorry if this is TMI) it's SO difficult not to get angry when my other half isn't 'in the mood' or too tired to baby dance.

We've been trying for 4 months, trying not to let this emotional void get any bigger. But it's getting harder and harder to stay excited about trying!!!

Any advice you can give?"

I definitely understand where she's coming from...

And although this is something you're working toward privately...

Believe me when I say you're not alone.

We all go through similar feelings, but here's what I suggest:

No matter how long you've been on your journey to motherhood, remember that sex can still be FUN.

It doesn't have to become a chore.

That's what Scott and I loved about developing and using UConceive:

It's something we were able to do together...

It reminded us that we were a team and kick-started our motivation...

Other couples have said the same, too...

There's no gimmicks with UConceive.

Everything is based on solid science and was developed by doctors and fertility specialists.

And it's FDA approved, too.

Even if you have PCOS, high blood pressure, diabetes, etc...

...you can safely use Uconceive .

Anyway, here's where to get more info or try it for yourself with zero risk:

PS - Check out one of those couples I mentioned has to say about UConceive:

"After two years of trying [to conceive], I finally convinced my husband to try UConceive.

Three months later, I'm finally pregnant!

I'm so excited - thanks UConceive!" - Janice

Try Uconceive for yourself and if you're not happy, all you have to do is ask for your money back:
